

SULTAN AND SALLIE NOW RULE IN BRONX GARDENS.

sultan

As affectionate and apparently as happy a couple as dwell in the city are Sultan and Sallie, the two young orang-outangs who have been elected to take the places in the New York Zoological Gardens of Rajah and Bunnie, the late lamented couple who died recently.

Sultan and Sallie have most of the characteristics of humans. They love each other dearly. They sit at table and handle knives, forks and spoons with quite as much grace and facility as the average child of their years. About the only thing they cannot do is talk the English language.

Sultan and Sallie have just recovered from a severe attack of typhoid fever, the disease that killed their predecessors. Their symptoms were the same and so was their treatment. They had their own physician, who paid regular visits to their sick bed twice a day and administered the same drugs as to any patient.

By the courtesy of Director W. J. Hornaday an Evening World reporter was permitted to visit and photograph them for the first time since their illness. They were smuggled close together in a corner of their cage and at first took little notice of the visitor except to give him a furtive glance now and then. But soon growing bolder they swung themselves to the front wire of the cage and each extended a hand for a friendly shake. In this attitude the snap shot was taken.

"Exactly Like a Lady," To induce them to keep quiet Under-keeper Joseph Miles pretended to pour some tea in a cup and held it toward them. Suddenly Sultan made a quick grab and got the cup. Finding it empty he threw it at Miles petulantly and began to cry exactly like a baby. When the keeper reproved him and slapped his hand for punishment, Sultan screamed with rage, and climbed down and buried his head under his bed of hay.

Sallie followed her mate, and petted him just as one child would another. She put both arms around him tenderly and actually seemed to whisper words of comfort in his ear. Soon Sultan came out of his sulks, and Keeper Miles rewarded him with a piece of banana.

For their light lunch at midday Sultan and Sallie were permitted to come out and eat at their table. Sallie was the first to climb into her high chair. There being nothing on the table as yet but a small dinner bell, Sallie grabbed it and rang it vigorously. When she thought Keeper Miles did not respond quickly enough she threw the bell at him.

"It's only her funny way," said Miles. "How They Eat Bananas." Then he gave her a banana and a snap shot was taken while she was munching it. Sallie watched the camera narrowly, and when it clicked she ducked her head, evidently fearing that its intentions were not friendly. Next Sultan took his seat beside Sallie and they hugged each other instead of saying grace. Sultan got a banana, too, and side by side they chewed their contentedly, and then licked their fingers—just like children again.

They had not handled knives and forks since their illness, but a couple of spoons were handed them with cups of cocoa. They stirred the cocoa and tried to spoon out the sugar before it melted.

When Keeper Miles was not looking they dropped their spoons on the floor and gulped down the cocoa so quickly that it burned their throats. Their grimaces of pain were ludicrous. Sultan and Sallie were born in Borneo. Sallie is three years old and Sultan two. Sallie is 2-1/2 feet tall and Sultan 2 feet. Their arms are the longest part of them, each having a reach of more than five feet.

Eat Thrice a Day.

They eat three times a day. Breakfast, at 8 A. M., consists of cereals, fruit and cocoa. Lunch at 12 is of fruit only. At 3 P. M. comes dinner, of cereals and cocoa.

They retire before dark and are good sleepers, rarely being asleep before the entrance of their keeper at 7 A. M. The only vice they are known to possess is the love of liquor, and Head-keeper Albert Munzie takes care that this is not gratified.

Sallie is said once to have stolen a half pint and to have swallowed it all, but never again did she repeat the feat. She is well covered with yellowish wool, but Sultan is as bald from head to foot as a Chinese dog.

LYNCH NEGRO IN KENTUCKY

Members of a Mob Shoot Him Down When He Escapes.

HODGENVILLE, Ky., Oct. 31.—A mob of seventy-five citizens came down upon this little town about 2 o'clock this morning and took from the jail Silas Esters, a negro, charged with forcing Granville Ward, a fifteen-year-old boy, of Near Upton, to commit a crime, and strung him to the Court-House steps.
